

David Hogg

David Hogg, now 20, is a gun control activist, college student, and one of the co-founders of the March for Our Lives movement. He became a household name when he was a 17-year-old high school senior who survived the Marjory Stoneman Douglas shooting on February 14, 2018. At the time, David was a student journalist for the Sun Sentinel's Teenlink section. Hogg used his journalistic skills during the Parkland shooting by recording a video of him and his fellow classmates huddled together, sharing their views on gun violence prevention as an active shooter situation was unfolding in their school. He is a co-founder of the March for Our Lives movement and is still advocating for gun control reform.

Hogg has continued to criticize politicians for accepting money from the National Rifle Association (NRA), and has called out President Trump and Senator Marco Rubio (R-FL) by saying that the NRA "owns" them and that the President is "hypocrite that is owned by the NRA." Additionally, Hogg has played a major role in calling for boycotts to pressure companies about their relationship to the NRA, which has led to many major businesses cutting ties with the pro-gun group. Now, David attends Harvard University and is majoring in Political Science. He has continued to be involved with March for Our Lives as a board member of the organization.

Sources: <http://www.latimes.com/nation/nationnow/la-na-nra-companies-boycott-20180224-htmstory.html>
<http://time.com/5161034/florida-school-shooting-survivor/>
<https://www.nbcnews.com/news/us-news/parkland-survivor-david-hogg-going-harvard-university-n951371>
<https://marchforourlives.com/leadership/>